

LAPSE of NP CERTIFICATION FOR DCNP NURSES

This article is to clear up some questions that have come up affecting your professional credentials and licensure in relationship to the Nurse Practitioner certification exam.

We want to emphasize that sitting for the dermatology certified nurse Practitioner (DCNP) exam does not and will not replace the national certification you hold as a nurse practitioner. You must maintain your certification as a family, adult, pediatric or geriatric nurse practitioner through the American Nurses Credentialing Center (ANCC) and/or the American Academy of Nurse Practitioners (AANP) in order to continue to practice as a nurse practitioner as required by applicable state law.

You must not let those certifications lapse or you will have to retake those exams. The failure to continue your separate nurse practitioner status with ANCC or AANP could lead to losing the right to practice certain aspects of health care treatment permitted to nurse practitioners. The DCNP is an additional credential to the nurse practitioner certification but does NOT replace it.

Megan Ferguson, DCNP BSN MSN FNP
President, Dermatology Nurse Practitioner Certification Board

For any questions, please contact our home office:

Dermatology Nurse Practitioner Certification Board (DNPCB)
222 S. Riverside Plaza, Suite 1870 | Chicago, Illinois 60606
888.501.3853 | www.dnpcb.org
Tracy Schorle, Senior Director | tschorle@dpsamc.com